Common Grace

Saturday, February 25th @ 10:30 AM

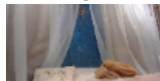

FOSL hosts a special discussion on history, race and coming together. Join Betty Kilby Baldwin and Phoebe Kilby for a special discussion of their experience answering Martin Luther King's call for ancestors of slave owning families and ancestors of slaves to come together to talk of their lives and to find peace and racial understanding. Through genetic testing it was proven that the current Kilby families are genetically related and that research seems to point to a particular member of the slave owning Kilby family taking advantage of a Kilby slave (Betty's great-great-grandmother). They are willing to talk about the lives of women during the era of slavery. Their message to all is that despite history people can succeed.

Meet the Staff!

My name is Denine and I am an assistant librarian in the youth services department. I have been working at the library for a few months and am very grateful for such an amazing workplace. My favorite part about working at the library would be getting to work with the kids in the community. Something I've done recently that I have enjoyed would be moving to Front Royal with my Fiancé. Front Royal is such a great place to live and I am happy that I moved here. Outside of the library I love to go hiking and spend time in nature.

Book Recommendation

My name is Danielle and I have worked in Circulation for almost four years. I was raised in Front Royal, and I remember the excitement of my family's trips to the old library location. My favorite part of working here now is seeing children coming to the library so excited and checking out books I loved when I was their age too. I am a huge bookworm, primarily fantasy, and I also enjoy sewing and crafting. Last year, I went on a trip to South Korea to visit a friend. It was amazing seeing such a different part of the world and being immersed in a new culture.
